Full Bio

Mr. Bain is an experienced real estate and business litigator, representing individual and business landowners facing the prospect of losing their properties or businesses to condemnation by a government or utility for the construction of road, power line, gas line, park, or other public use. Mr. Bain also represents landowners in disputes involving their real estate, such as boundary line disputes, trespasses, encroachments, construction disputes, liens and foreclosures.

Additionally, Mr. Bain's practice involves representation of individuals and businesses in litigation and disputes concerning insurance coverage and general business and commercial matters. Prior to joining FCW, Mr. Bain worked in different sectors of the legal industry, having worked for Atlanta law firms representing insurers and their insureds, governmental entities, and banks. Throughout his career, Mr. Bain has gained experience working both for and against governmental agencies, banks, and insurance companies, culminating in his current practice of representing individuals and businesses in matters that often require knowledge of these entities. From eminent domain to insurance coverage disputes, to personal injury actions, Mr. Bain brings his varied experience to bear on a client's case to try and obtain a favorable solution.

Mr. Bain graduated from the University of Georgia, magna cum laude, with a degree in political science and obtained his law degree from the University of Georgia School of Law.

Mr. Bain lives with his wife and three children in Alpharetta, Georgia. When he is not working, Mr. Bain enjoys spending time with his family, participating in activities with his church, Alpharetta Methodist Church, and following local sports, particularly the Georgia Bulldogs.
